Hyaena Mask, Bamana, carved wood, Mali, 19th century

45 x 15 cm

Collection of the artist

Such masks were used during the Kore initiation, which ensured proper behaviour and social mores and the development of male identity. During their exhibition, the wearers of this mask most often adopt a bent position, supporting themselves on two short sticks that extend their forearms. The symbolism of the hyena, very complex, varies considerably according to the context, but within the framework of the Kore society the hyena most probably represents the initiates' efforts to perfect their secret knowledge

We can firm up our identity, she suggests—but it will only ever be a mold, or a mask. Deeply influenced by Rimbaud, who declared that “Je est un autre” (“I is another”), Claude Cahun replies, “Je est un autre—un multiple toujours”—“I is another—and always multiple.”

Shiva Lingam stone

Courtesy the artist and Michael Anastassiades

Shiva Lingam is a crypto-crystalline member of the Quartz family. This stone is found in only one of seven sacred Indian rivers. Villagers visit the Narmada River in Onkar Mandhata and polish these river rocks to better define their famed lingam shape. In Hindu culture, the lingam is a representation of the Lord Shiva in Shivaism and is believed to be a representation of their phallus. The Lingam represents the Brahmanda, which means “cosmic egg”, symbolising the creation of both the divine male and female energies.
